

The Dr. Shirley S. Seaton

Spring 2012 Cultural Awareness Series

The Center for Student Diversity and Inclusion invites you to an exploration of cultural differences and celebration of diversity.

By 1961, Diane Nash had emerged as one of the most-respected student leaders of the sit-in movements in Nashville, Tennessee. Raised in a middle-class Catholic family in Chicago, Nash attended Howard University before transferring to Nashville's Fisk University in fall 1959. Shocked by the extent of segregation she encountered in Tennessee, she was a founding member of the Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee (SNCC) in April 1960.
