APPLICATION PACKET

IGNATIAN SPIRITUALITY INSTITUTE

John Carroll University

APPLICATION INSTRUCTIONS

1. Fill out the application form. If you wish, you may attach a more detailed resume or curriculum vitae.
2. Write a faith/life autobiography (3-5 pages). Briefly describe your faith/life journey, including your relationship with God, the people, places and events that have most formed you in your faith, the place of prayer in your life, and any experiences you have had with spiritual direction, especially with the Ignatian Spiritual Exercises. Include a statement expressing how you have come to desire training in spiritual direction.
3. On a separate sheet, write your vision of ministry, especially the ministry of spiritual direction (no more than one page).
4. Request transcripts from any institutions of higher learning you have attended and have them sent directly to the ISI.
5. Distribute reference forms to three people who will be able to recommend you to the program. Select people who can speak knowledgeably about your suitability for the ministry of spiritual and retreat direction, people who have observed you in a professional or ministerial setting, or people with whom you have shared your life of faith. Have them send their references directly to the ISI.

Admission materials are due in the ISI office by April 1.

NB: We will accept applications after April 1 if our quota is not reached by then. Early application is strongly advised.

Members of the ISI Steering Committee will evaluate the application materials and select candidates to be invited for an interview. After the interview with 3 members of the Steering Committee you will be notified of the decision regarding your acceptance.

IGNATIAN SPIRITUALITY INSTITUTE
at John Carroll University

The Ignatian Spirituality Institute (ISI) offers an educational program for the training of spiritual directors in the tradition of the Spiritual Exercises of Ignatius Loyola. The ISI is ideally suited to those interested in the ministry of spiritual direction and/or retreat work. However, more generally, the ISI offers adult Christians of any denomination theological and spiritual tools for deepening Christian life and ministry, whether in the home, parish, congregation, or workplace.

As an affiliate program of the Department of Religious Studies, courses are held at John Carroll University. The program is structured as a non-credit, non-degree certificate program running concurrently with the Fall-Spring academic calendar at the university. Instructors are members of the John Carroll University faculty, with occasional guest lecturers.

The program is designed around three areas of study: a) theology and scripture, with particular emphasis on Christian anthropology, christology, and scriptural exegesis as resources pertinent to the work of spiritual direction; 2) spirituality, particularly Ignatian spirituality, the Spiritual Exercises, discernment, types of prayer and mysticism; and 3) psychology, with particular focus upon models of psychosexual maturation and faith development, and the cultivation of listening skills.

Year I is academically focused, with classes meeting twice a month in the evenings, along with occasional weekend workshops. Year II is focused on the supervised practicum. Ordinarily this means the specific practice of spiritual direction, either of individuals or groups, under the guidance of a supervisor. Upon request, students may design an alternative program to bring the tradition of the Spiritual Exercises into their own ministry or profession, whatever that might be. In addition, classes meet once a month, with a few weekend workshops.

Requirements for admission include a written spiritual autobiography, three letters of recommendation, a record of education and work history, and an interview with the ISI Admissions Committee. Generally, it is expected that ISI participants will have completed a college degree, have several years of steady work or professional experience, and a variety of life experiences. The ISI Admissions Committee may make exceptions to these general criteria.

The ISI is intended for those Christians who have made basic life choices and have a regular habit of prayer or the desire to cultivate one. Christians from any denomination or walk of life are welcome.
