Work in Progress

Just war tradition and international law. With Amos Guiora, I have convened a working group on just war tradition and international law. The group consists of scholars in both ethics and law who have met for the past two years to facilitate a cross-disciplinary approach to the ethics of war. The group is scheduled to present its work at the National War College in the fall 2016.

The Ethics of Operational Psychology. The role of psychologists in the regime of enhanced interrogation ushered in after the terrorist attacks of 9/11 deeply divided the field of psychology. I have been working with psychologists in an effort to construct ethical guidelines for psychologists working in national security contexts.

Ethics and Accountability. Among the conclusions reached in my book The Ethics of Interrogation, is that professions must insist on accountability for their members. Without accountability, there is an erosion of the public trust that is necessary to flourishing professions. This study examines how the lack of accountability threatens a variety of professions, including psychology, ministry, and policing.
