

GI Bill Benefits & Aid Revision Policy

It is not uncommon for a student to already be receiving federal, state, or institutional aid at John Carroll University prior to either becoming eligible for or choosing to utilize their GI Bill benefits. Once the eligibility for GI Bill benefits has been determined, a student already in possession of a university aid letter should expect to receive a revised financial aid award. This revision will typically ensure that GI Bill benefits, when combined with organizational funding from the university, does not exceed direct tuition and fees. Eligibility for federal and state funding, including loans, can be used to offset room, board and other educational expenses.

This revision process will ensure compliance with internal and external policies as well as federal regulations. Potential GI Bill students who are already in receipt of financial aid from the university should consult with Student Enrollment and Financial Services to ensure that they have an accurate understanding of how their aid could be revised once they choose to employ GI Bill benefits.
