

GI Bill Add/Drop Policy

VA benefits are awarded to students based on full-time enrollment at the University. When a GI Bill student considers adding or dropping courses at the university, it may create an unexpected bill for the student or could result in the VA seeking reimbursement from the student, respectively. GI Bill students should consult with their academic advisor as well as Student Enrollment and Financial Services if they intend to add or drop a class.

Intent to add or drop a class should be reported to the Student Enrollment and Financial Services. Before finalizing the decision to add or drop a class, Student Enrollment and Financial Services will counsel the student as to feasible alternatives and possible consequences which could affect the student's status, progress to graduation, benefits, or payments under the GI Bill.

Failure to report adding or dropping a class could result in underpayment or overpayment of Department of Veterans Affairs (VA) benefits. Additionally, unreported dropping of classes by Chapter 33 students could also cause in an unanticipated loss of additional benefits such as housing allowance or book stipend.
